READING

Young adults make different choices about where to live after finishing school. Some move into their own homes, while others stay with family. Many young people continue living with their parents after graduation.

What are some benefits of living with parents? Young adults can reduce the amount of money they spend on rent, food, and household bills. This may help them save for education, travel, or future housing. In addition, family members can share housework. Cooking, cleaning, shopping, and other daily tasks may become easier when several people help.

However, living with parents also has some problems. Young adults may have fewer chances to develop independence. They may continue depending on family members for decisions or daily responsibilities. Another problem is that privacy can be limited. Sharing rooms and common spaces may make it difficult to relax, invite friends, or follow personal routines without affecting other people in the household.
